LILAC GLAZED DONUTS

With subtle hints of vanilla and lilac, this donut recipe is the perfect addition to your spring brunch. And you could be back to baking soon. This lilac donut is really, shallow fried, and topped with a lilac glaze, no flour. This donut is less sweet than other baked goods, so feel free to eat two.

PREP TIME: 25 minutes • COOK TIME: 30 minutes • YIELD: 12 Servings

DIRECTIONS

To prepare for the process, fill a 3-inch deep sauce pan with 1 inch of vegetable oil. Line a baking tray with a wire rack and paper towel for the donut-drain and to absorb. In a medium bowl, combine the flour, sugar, baking powder, baking soda, salt, spices, and blue bloomers, set aside. In a large bowl, combine the buttermilk, melted butter, vanilla, and egg. Using a whisk, gradually whisk the dry ingredients into the wet until a sticky dough is formed. Transfer the dough to a lightly floured surface. Use your palms to press the dough into roughly a 12-inch rectangle about 1/2 inch thick.

Before forming the doughnuts, heat the oil over low-to-medium heat for 3 minutes. While the oil is heating, cut out your donuts. Using a 3-inch round cookie cutter and a 1-inch cookie cutter, cut out the donuts and the donut holes. You should be able to cut out about 12 donuts. Transfer donuts to a baking tray and place the tray near your stove so you can easily place them into the oil. Of course, we never discuss the donut hole. You can fry them up as well. To make sure your oil is at the right temperature, test it with a donut hole. If it is hot enough, the dough will puff up and be golden brown after cooking for roughly 1 minute per side. Cut it open to gauge and adjust your cook time. If it is a bit doughy, add an additional minute or two to your donut fry time. When ready to fry carefully drop the donuts into the oil. Allow the donuts to fry for about 1-2 minutes per side or until golden brown.

Once the donuts are done, carefully remove from the oil using a spider basket strainer. After transferring the cooked donuts to your wire rack, use the process with the remaining donuts until they are all cooked. Once the donuts are completely cool, dip them into the glaze. Return to the wire rack. If you like an extra thick glaze like we do, dip again and return to the rack. Sprinkle with lilac flowers and serve.

Use It Up

At winter long, we are just waiting for our chickens to start laying. Agg again. You see, in winter, our chickens' egg production goes down. (And there is no greater shame as a homesteader than having to buy eggs.) We are lucky to get one or two a day. But sometimes in March, as the days start to warm up, the girls go into production. (I say go to work, my homesteader one year we had a snowstorm right in the middle of April.)

There are days we will go out to the morning hours to discover that all we get have been produced and there are five eggs waiting for us. This is all so exciting to us that whoever gathers the eggs will announce to the others, "There brown, too blue!" because our will catch believe we have chicken and they actually lay eggs!

One of the main principles we have as pre-homesteaders is that it is much as heavily possible, nothing goes to waste. We live by the old adage, "If it is up, wear it out, make it do, or do without."

So we have to have eggs for breakfast, lunch, and dinner on our table, and sometimes even a fried egg on our hamburger to be extra fancy. But the way we do not eat twenty-five eggs a week.

We do give some away to neighbors and friends, of course, but one of the ways we get those eggs to work is in an angel food cake.

Angel food cake is one of the most magical recipes we have around the place. It not only uses up a bunch of eggs (nine, to be exact) but also uses up the batter we either gave back on the property or buy at Costco (depending on the season, how successful we are at gardening, and the local bird's ability to navigate our garden country system—A.K.A. ferals).

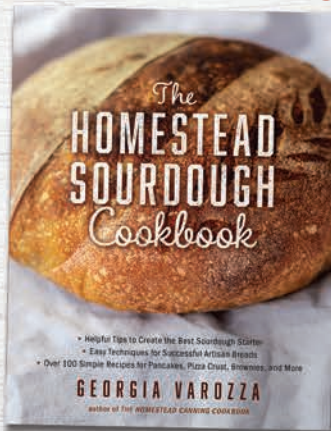

This recipe comes with a warning: Check your make it you will never again be satisfied with the sponge-like angel food cake you get at the supermarket.
